

Marina Updates After Hurricane Matthew

Last Update: 11/16/2016, 2:15 p.m.

Editor's Note: As of November 9th, the Waterway Guide survey below finds that about 95% of the marinas affected by Hurricane Matthew are open for business. Some are still working on repairs, but looking to complete those in the immediate future. There are only a few facilities that are still closed and don't know when they will reopen, as noted in the report below. This list is updated daily by our diligent team of researchers.

New Bern Grand Marina Yacht Club	New Bern	NC	"The marina is known as a deep water year-round marina, but when severe weather conditions exist, our occupancy rates have historically jumped. However, this year was much different. At one point, we had completely run out of large slips and had only three 40' slips left to rent. The marina was nearly 100% occupied which meant that Matthew was a storm to be respected. The wave attenuator along with the fact that the marina offers floating docks aided in the safety and protection for the marina's live-aboard community and nearly 230 boats; along with the preservation of the marina as a whole. When you see the damage that Matthew ravaged throughout the entire east coast, we were fortunate in that we experienced zero damage, but more importantly, that the tenants and guests felt safe." states Millissa True, on-site consultant.
